From January 17 to 21, the World Economic Forum hosted the Davos Agenda 2022 virtual event bringing together heads of state and government, CEOs and other leaders to propose solutions to global challenges. Among the topics that were discussed at this year's online sessions were the COVID-19 pandemic response, the global economic recovery, climate action, technological innovation and global collaboration. In his address, UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres, speaking from New York, stated global solidarity is missing in action" as the recovery from the paralyzing economic crises due to the pandemic has slowed down drastically.

He said, "The last two years have demonstrated a simple but brutal truth – if we leave anyone at the back, we leave everyone behind." The UN chief urged all the participants to confront the pandemic with equity and fairness; reform the global financial system, so it works for all countries; and to take climate action that in developing countries.

Feb: PROFOH WELCOME PROGRESS MADE ON THE TREATMENT OF HIV

Phase 1 clinical trial conducted by University of Minnesota researchers has demonstrated the safety and efficacy of a novel immunotherapy drug in the treatment of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). Results of the trial were published today in Nature Medicine. "We are excited by the promise shown in this initial trial," said Tim Schacker, MD, the study principal investigator and vice dean for research at the Medical School.

"We hope to move this work into Phase II trials so that we can ultimately add a hopeful treatment for those living with HIV. "The trial involves a novel investigative drug -- N-803 -- that has been studied in blood cancers and with other tumors. This is the first time the drug has been tested with HIV patients, moving beyond the preclinical phase of study.

This Phase 1 trial at the University enrolled 16 participants who were required to be on antiretroviral therapy (ART) for at least one year. Of enrollees, 11 completed the trial with minimal adverse effects, suggesting N-803 administration for HIV patients who are ART-suppressed is safe. Although not a primary goal of the trial, participants using N-803 showed a significant decrease in HIV infected cells in the blood for a period of up to six months following treatment. "What was exciting in this Phase 1 trial was that it actually showed a decrease in the number of HIV infected cells, suggesting this might eventually be part of a long-awaited HIV cure strategy" said Schacker. The research team hopes the drug will go to Phase 2 trials in the near future.
